

POLITICS 2.0

Overview

Politics 2.0 is not a how-to perspective on advancing community electoral politics from civics 101 to a 2.0 application. Politics 2.0 is presented in an aspirational framework without practical goals and objectives targeted to the immediate future. The wisdom of Politics 2.0 is directed to the millennial generations, in terms of children that are born after the year 2000. This represents our definition of millennial's, which is void of commercial and marketing implications. By way of a full disclosure my five grandchildren are among the millennial's therefore, I confess my personal interest and investment in the informed fullness of their future.

It is our considered judgment that the critical mass of citizens, in geographic communities, that are required to implement a Politics 2.0 education and application initiative will not occur with the popular level of voter organization, sophistication and application. The popular way electoral politics is done by the community at large, such as it is, precludes the prospect of modulating the electorate, from the popular political juxtapositions. Therefore, this work is targeted to the millennial generations who will begin voting following their eighteenth birthday. Consequently, we have a few years to advance the Politics 2.0 voter education and applications by way of our unfolding podcast series.

The series will begin with, a postmortem of presidential election 2016... The inauguration Politics 2.0 Podcast will offer a general assessment and analysis of the electoral process in the United States. In addition, the content will offer a considered political perspective relative to the electoral politics in the Virgin Islands...

The content and substance of Politics 2.0 is tailored to the general public irrespective of ethnicity or "political minority" status. Politics 2.0 is directed to the geographical community in the context of neighborhood, and community, which in most demographics includes various ethnicities, and political minorities residing in the neighborhood/community. The geographical framework of Politics 2.0 voter education and application initiative mirrors to a great extent the respective Assembly Districts (ADs) within the political boundaries of neighborhoods and communities in the United States. Specifically, the power and leverage of the electorate is maximized by way of the geographic of a neighborhood or community, and the direct participation in the primary election of the political parties..

However, this geographical approach to organizing and maximizing the political power potential of a community can be successfully applied to specific ethnic and political minority communities, as well. For example, the black community has the potential to move from point A to point B, by way of the Politics 2.0 voter education and application plan. The Politics 2.0 initiative explores how the electoral system and party politics is structured and operates in the United States of America. And voting patterns that occurred in the 19th, 20th and 21st centuries are observed...

The basic thesis of Politics 2.0 is that the social, economic, and political elite in America has circumscribed the universe of discourse that animates the popular electoral process and quality of participation. And in so doing, the relevant parties are apparently reluctant to provide fundamental information on basic lessons in civics and how the electoral process is structured and operates. Therefore, the various political party stakeholders and role players have the general public organized in respective political constituents that perpetuate a circular juxtaposition... At the end of the day, the more things change the more they remain the same...

Although the first Podcast will be a postmortem of presidential election 2016, in addition to observations regarding the Virgin Islands electoral process; dynamic political events may occur that compel us to observe, post and comment on current events...
